

RIAC General Information

ILS Regional Immigration Assistance Centers

The Sixth Amendment requires defense counsel to provide clients with specific advice about clear immigration consequences of a plea bargain. See Padilla v Kentucky, 599 US 386 (2010). The failure of counsel to meet that constitutional duty can have profound consequences for noncitizen clients. But giving competent advice requires knowledge of immigration laws that are complex and constantly in flux, and many defender offices and ACPs cannot hire in-house experts. Fortunately, free expert advice is available to defenders.

To ensure that counsel has access to the support needed to provide effective assistance to noncitizens, in 2016, ILS created a statewide network of Regional Immigration Assistance Centers (RIACs or Centers), staffed by attorneys with extensive expertise in immigration law. This innovative program was the first of its kind in the nation. In 2020, ILS initiated a new three-year contract period, offering grants to continue to fully fund the RIACs.

The extensive services provided by RIAC attorneys include immigration advisals in criminal, appellate, and post-conviction matters, as well as in Family Court cases carrying potential immigration consequences. The Centers also offer extensive trainings to counsel and courts.

In 2020, the Centers collectively responded to more than 2,000 requests for assistance. Defense counsel and the RIACs joined forces to protect noncitizens because they understand that the consequences of a plea bargain regarding even a minor offense may mean the difference between the client maintaining a life in the United States or being permanently separated from family and banished from a country long considered home. Often a RIAC can help counsel persuade a prosecutor to use an alternative plea deal providing for a conviction of the same level for the same jail time, while avoiding an inequitable penalty of deportation or inadmissibility. To find the Center serving your county, please see the information below.
